RED CROSS FUND DRIVE SET FOR FRIDAY NIGHT

William A. Hunter, chairman of the Appomattox County Chapter of the American Red Cross, has announced that Friday night has been designated for a house-to-house canvass for contributions to the Red Cross. The local chapter is in desperate need of funds to carry on its work. Chapter officials are asking that the public respond to this appeal, and give generously so that the county quota can be met.

Volunteer workers will visit homes Friday night, and a solicitation will also be made at business places on Friday.

Marketing Margins

Since 1952, the average marketing margin in the nation for a single quart of milk has increased about 17%, report VPI economists.

The average margin for all sales of fluid milk has increased less than for single quarts, because of the shift toward multiple-quart containers and quantity discount plans. Operating costs have increased more than marketing margins. The net margin before income taxes has decreased by nearly one-third.

We are hoping for Appomattox's beloved Presbyterian minister a safe and happy journey.

Soil Bank Program For 1959 Will Have Number of Changes

The 1959 Conservation Reserve of the Soil Bank Program has just been announced by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The pro-gram, which is administered by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation State Committee, includes a number of changes from the Conservation Reserve that has been in effect since 1956, according to W. T. Powers, ASC State Administrator.

The program's objective is to withdraw cropland from production on a long-range basis; adjust total acreage to that needed to keep supplies in balance with requirements.

To be eligible, it requires that farmers establish and maintain sound soil and water conservation practices on the land which is placed in the Reserve.

Powers explained that the Conservation Reserve is a voluntary program, under which farmers sign contracts to take part for a definite period of years. In return, the government assists producers (1) by sharing the cost of establishing conservation practices, and (2) by making annual payments during the period each contract is in effect.

The 1959 crop year will be the fourth year of the Conservation Reserve, the ASC official stated. A total of about 10 million acres is now in the program, put there under contracts signed in 1956, 1957, and 1958. (The Acreage Reserve of the Soil Bank, a year-to-year program under which farmers earned payments for keeping their "allotment" acres of basic crops, will probably be discontinued after 1958).

Effective with 1959 contracts, several changes have been made in the Conservation Reserve which will strengthen its operations, Powers said. He enumerated them as (1) a higher national average annual payment rate of $15.30 as compared with the previous average of $10.00, (2) greater incentives to put "whole farms" in the programs, and (3) a priority basis for acceptance of offers to take part in the programs, if total applications exceed available funds in a county.

Under the priority system a farmer may offer land for the Reserve at less than the minimum annual payment rate established for his farm, Powers explained. ASC committees in accepting offres will give priority to those farmers who offer land at the lowest percentage of the rate established for the farm. Thus, farmers offering land at less than the maximum rate will be more certain of acceptance.

Each acre of cropland put in the Conservation Reserve will reduce the number of acres available for harvested crops and therefore materially help in the overall production adjustment effort. Since the acres taken out of production must be protected by such cover as grasses, trees, or wildlife cover, the program assures major progress in the conservation of soil, water, forest, and wildlife material resources.

Regarding payments, Powers explained that the regular maximum payments to be earned by putting land into the Conservation Reserve which will be in effect during the past two years has been in Soi Bank "base crops" (grains, cotton and rice crops).

A lower per-acre rate of payment, not to exceed 50 per cent of the maximum rate for the farm, may be earned by putting into the Conservation Reserve certain "non-diversion" land which consists principally of crop land that has been planted to row crops and small grains in the past two years.

Under the 1959 program there will be special payment provisions for farmers who elect to put the entire farm under the Conservation Reserve. This would include all eligible cropland — both the Soil Bank "base" land and the "non-diversion" land. Such "whole farm" participation would earn the maximum regular rate for all acres in the program plus a 10 per cent increase.

The per-acre rates are the annual payments made each year a Conservation Reserve contract is in effect. In addition a farmer may earn a payment covering a substantial part of the cost of establishing approved conservation practices on the land in the Reserve. Powers stated that the Virginia average annual payment rate for 1959 contracts will be $16.00 per acre with county rates varying up and down from this figure depending upon land value and productivity. Similarly, individual farm rates will vary up and down from the county rate.

A national 1959 Conservation Reserve goal has been set at 12,500,000 acres. For Virginia a goal of 75,000 acres, has been established for new contracts in 1959. This compares with a total of 10,334 acres placed under Reserve contracts on 480 farms in 1956, 1957, and 1958.

The Conservation Reserve is administered at the county level through ASC committeemen. To acquaint committeemen and other ASC personnel with the program, ASC officials are holding five meetings at various points in the state. The first of these is in Abingdon on August 4, then in Lynchburg on August 5, in Harrisonburg August 6, in Richmond on August 7, and in Fredericksburg on August 8.

County ASC officers are expected to commence the sign up of farmer's applications for Conservation Reserve contracts in late August or early September. Before signing a contract a farmer must first indicate a desire to participate so that ASC committees may establish a maximum payment rate for the farm. October 10 has been set as the last day on which farmers may express a desire to participate and October 24 is the final day for signing applications for Conservation Reserve contracts.

State Agent To Retire

Retirement of Miss Maude E. Wallace, assistant director of the Virginia Agricultural Extension Service at VPI, has been announced as effective Sept. 1.

The recipient of many honors and awards during her long years of service, Miss Wallace began her career in the Extension Service in 1919 when she came to Virginia to assist in emergency food work during the war. In 1919, she went to North Carolina as home demonstration agent. She was promoted nine months later to district agent and shortly thereafter became assistant state agent in North Carolina. She returned to Virginia in 1929, and became assistant director of the Extension Service in 1937.

With careful guidance she helped a small organization of women, known as "The Virginia Homemaker's Association," develop into the largest woman's organization in the state. The name was changed in 1934 to the Virginia Federation of Home Demonstration Clubs, which now has a membership of almost 40,000 women.

Miss Wallace grew up on an Illinois farm, and one of her foremost aims has been to see as far as possible that "country people have the same sort of advantages as everyone else. The expanded use of electricity on Virginia farms, the installation of water systems, better nutrition, a keener sense of citizenship, and in general a higher standard of living for rural people are achievements in which Miss Wallace can share a personal claim. Under her direction home demonstration work in Virginia has grown from limited programs in 36 counties to broad extensive programs in 94 counties. Ten specialists, 7 district agents, and 123 county workers are now employed to carry out these programs.

Appointment of Miss Lucy Powers Blake, district home demonstration agent in east central district since 1948, to succeed Miss Wallace was also announced. She is a native of North Carolina and a graduate of Woman's College, University of North Carolina. She holds a M. A. degree from Columbia University.
